Maple, and oak

Description

An imposing arm chair with curved and molded rear stiles that continue into the crest rail. A leather upholstered panel held in place by two rows of brass tacks forms the back. The carved arms end in a slightly splayed volute shaped hand rest over baluster turned supports which continue into the front legs, that are also baluster turned above and below the front stretcher. The leather seat is upholstered over the rails, and also ornamented with two rows of brass tacks. A turned tripartite front stretcher features a reel flanked by two ball elements. It attaches to the front legs with conical shaped terminals. The other three stretchers are of simple rectangular form. The arm chair has been shorted by the loss of its feet that were presumably ball shaped.
