A woman's simple summer one-piece day dress of red spotted white muslin. The gown is constructed with sloped shoulders, a relatively blousy, loose-fitting bodice with an inner muslin lining with hook and eye front closure, long shaped sleeves, and a wide elliptical skirt silhouette with a slight train. The bodice fastens with a front button closure, working buttons with hand-sewn buttonholes alternating with false buttons. the gown's waistband fastens with a single hook and eye at left. The skirt's front is constructed to resemble a casual wrapper, with an open front seam hemmed along left and right edge, held closed with spaced false buttons down the entire center front of the skirt. The bodice includes a simple tab collar, piped armscyes, and full shaped long sleeves tapered and gathered at the wrists. Half-inch woven white cotton braid tape is applied in a double band along the bodice edge of the armscyes, with additional double bands of tape applied along the shoulder seams as epaulette-style trim. Triple bands of tape are sewn around the wrists. A six-inch width of the spotted muslin is used as an inside facing along the skirt hem, bound with the same white braid tape trim as used at the shoulders and wrists.
