Medium

Maple, and ash

Description

A large slat back arm chair consisting of four graduated slats that have straight bottom edges and arched top edges. The top slat has an additional cut out motif in its center. The rear stiles feature ball turnings between the slats. They terminate in large ball finials above a ring turning. The front stiles also have ball turnings above and below the upper stretcher, and also at the base of the arm supports that include a baluster turning and a conical shaped terminal just under the large, shaped hand rest. The arms are undercut. The frame is braced by two sausage turned front stretchers, four plain turned side stretchers, and one similar rear stretcher. The woven rush seat is a replacement, and the chair has been pieced out below the lowest ball turning on the front legs. However, the original lower row of stretchers may have been reused.
